ASTORIA, OREGON: SEPTEMBER 11, 1883

Continued from 1st Page, and trade in a country which emerged but fifteen years from a civil war-whose sacrifices of ablebodied producers and of accumuiated wealth had never been equaled-appalled its creditors by paying its debts, and impoverished its lenders by the reduction of interest they submitted to, to escape the payment of the principal. Just and well tried confidence in the character no less than in the ability of the sponsors for the ultimate outcome of the outlay-I mean of the eminent men who have conducted and are conducting the affairs of this companyhas formed the controlling, the unfailing, the indispensable element in that faith among men which has supplied the means for this completed structure. To you, Mr. Villard, and to you, Governor Smith, to you, Mr. Billings, and all the other presidents, present or absent; to you, and all others who have felt your arms lean on them for support, this day crowns your labors, and we, your fellow citizens, and these foreign guests, appland your triumph.

I cannot stay your train to unfold the manifold qualities in the management of this enterprise, which deserves illustration, but I may maist for a moment upon a few principal traits. I cannot discover that there has ever been engrafted upon this enterprise any construction company to suck the prosperity that belongs to the original growth. I do not perceive that excessive rates, either of interest for money or of payment for labor or materials for want of money, have imposed upon the enterprise burdens disproportionate to the values which its debentures or its stock fairly represent. I do not find any just ground for complaint in political or popular estimate that the United States has burdened its revenues with subsidies which, for the public interest, were unnecessary or excessive, for from the beginning to the end the enterprise has the Pacific. It forms one more public funds. I find no fair portage for the water-borne comground for eavil at the land grants and Asia. It brings new fields of of the government along the route, tillage adequate to feed tens of as improvident or showing no adequate return of value either to the treasury or to expectant settlers on the public domain. Even if we look at the government in the mere light of a private proprietor, who will not him self incur the expenses and the risks of opening communication between his unpeopled wilderness and the land seeking population, we find the government without a dollar of outlay, made more than whole for the lands it has parted with by the enhanced selling value of its whole domain. But when we consider that the future settlers on the company's lands, as well as in the reserved public lands, forever contribute to the taxpaying wealth of the people, and the strength and power of the nation, we see that there is no sensible analogy between the interest of a private person in the ownership of land, and that of the government as an administrator, for the general welfare of the public domain. And finally, the settlers who will follow your track, and at once find their frugal means and farm products at no disadvantage from distance or isolation from market; but on a level with all the world, will easily understand that but for the wise liberality of the government in the matter of railroad communication, either the lands would have resettlers, or would not have been worth their accordance as a set.

In Astoria, Sept. 11th, by Rev. J. V. Milligan, Mrs. A. Rappleyea to John Bryce. mained inaccessible to agricultural worth their acceptance, as a gift, with a bounty besides.

The Northern Pacific railroad thus completed has, Mr. Presi. Special School Meeting District dent, through your seasonable and successful connection of its system with the well developed and fully operating scheme of the Oregon Railway and Navigation system, by the firm ties of justice and interest, been secured against vicisitudes and disasters to which, with less prudence and less good fortune it might have been exposed. It is not, then, merely upon the continuous track that you have just established, but also, upon the united and impregdent, through your seasonable and also, upon the united and impregnable chain of travel and traffic between the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, that your company looks
